School staff need to provide resources and multiple avenues for ongoing two-way communication with families, inviting families to understand, experience, inform, and support the well-rounded academic and social and emotional development of their students in partnership with the school.	Inclusive beliefs and practices need to be evident and part of the school culture.	All educators need to continuously access, interpret, analyze, act upon, and communicate multiple types of data from the classroom, the school, the district, the state and other sources to improve student outcomes.	Opportunities need to be provided for peer to peer observation and feedback and other collaboration.
We need to diversify our messaging and incoming communication channels.	More training is needed on all aspects of working with special populations.	Common formative assessments and subsequent data is needed.	We need to set aside time for peer observations and feedback as well as give opportunities to increase the experience level for teachers.
